At more I heard a blue bird sing;

The blue-bird, warbling soul of spring.

The prophet of the leafy May—

And I keew the violets under the tree

Would listen and look the bird to see,

Peeping timidly here and there

In purple and odor to charm the arr;

And the wind flower lifts its rose veined cop

In the leaves of the old year buried up;

And all the delicate buds that bloom

On the moss beds, deep in the forest gloom,

Would stir to their slumber and catch the strain,

And dream of the sun and the April rais spring has come when the bluesbird aings And folds in the maple his glossy wings, And the wind may blow and the storm may But the voice of summer is heard in all.

I am so blithe and glad to day!

My beart, beside the blue-bird, sings,
And folds, serene, its weary wings,
And knows the hours lead on to May!
